

ON THE LAND.

FARM AND STATION.
KEEPING FARM ACCOUNTS.

In the face of the fact that many farmers have been, and still are, conducting their business successfully, perhaps, without keeping accurate farm accounts, there is some justification for the question—why keep farm accounts at all? Conditions have changed materially within the past decade. More knowledge and skill are now required to farm successfully than were required of our forefathers. There are good reasons for keeping accurate farm records and accounts inasmuch as they increase one's knowledge of his business, they reveal and help to stop many leaks, they show one exactly where he stands financially, and by determining the cost of production they help to fix the selling price. Careful analysis of the business of farming involves records and accounts with each separate farm enterprise, as well as with the whole farm. This is a record of the labour as well as the cash expended on each enterprise, and means the opening of several accounts. These records may be still further supplemented by animal and feed records, and accounts of the various farm bookkeeping is, perhaps, somewhat different from ordinary bookkeeping, as everyone who has tried it knows. Maybe the farmer does not believe in any net result. He says, "I don't know how to keep my record in the same complete form as a commercial man in the city, and more often than otherwise the farmer will develop his own system according to his own needs and inclinations. But there are a few essentials, which experience will teach him to observe, namely, a clear understanding of what is wanted, simplicity of form, and minimum of details, a method of recording which is workable, and regular entries and summaries.

CLAIMS OF THE FARMER.

At the annual gathering of the Chamber of Agriculture on Saturday evening, reports were expressed by more than one member of the council that the operations of the chamber did not appear more closely to the agricultural interests of the State. The farmer stands at the head of the national production, and the well-being of the agricultural community is an index to the prosperity of the nation. The holding of land arduous with it, the obligation to keep up the land, the farmer is to say, it is the plain duty of every farmer to make the greatest profit possible from his use. The man on the land, however, must be able to keep his land in the country, and practically keep the cities alive, and it needs but little thought to demonstrate the unwisdom of withholding assistance to agriculture. The farmer's position, therefore, is the true index to the general state of trade in the Commonwealth.

The Chamber of Agriculture stands in the same relation to the primary producers as the Chamber of Commerce does to the commercial and business community, and as agriculture is the basis of a country's prosperity, any organization which fosters and encourages the interests of the producers is a body of great importance. The chamber was formed 10 years ago, to promote practical and scientific husbandry in its varied aspects, and to collect and disseminate information to assist the farmer in developing the resources of the soil. In enjoining advanced methods of cultivation, and the best means of "marketing" products, while it has been successful in bringing about an improvement in the breed of his stock, as well as to secure improved railway and other transport facilities, included in its objects are also the obtaining of information as to the best markets for agricultural produce, and the promotion of every means calculated to increase the comfort of rural life. It will at once be apparent, therefore, that the aims of the chamber, which is a large number of its members, are of a practical nature, and it has not hitherto been rewarded by a large number of its members, who are the welfare of the farming community, that cannot be said to be altogether the fault of its members.

The chamber has, however, been identified with a number of movements which have tended to the best interests of agriculture. We learn from the annual report that its delegates took a leading part in the formation of the Farmers' Union, and another matter which the chamber fought hard for was the creation of a separate Department of Agriculture. It also, as far back as 1904, advocated the establishment of a Federal Bureau of Agriculture, which now promises to become an accomplished fact, and it was successful in bringing about a desirable alteration in the practice relating to the responsibility of the Railway Department of transport. Again, the chamber, we are informed, was instrumental in some measure in securing the establishment of the Information Bureau, and agricultural show window at Chas. House, and a further important feature of its successful work was the successful action taken by the Farmers' Union, and the chamber in securing legislation to enforce the control of fruit pests. The chamber, therefore, can lay claim to some recognition of its efforts in the various directions mentioned, and although it does its work in a quiet and unobtrusive way, it none the less exercises an influence for good in the agricultural community, and the conditions of the man on the land.

ITEMS.

At the annual meeting of the district council of the Farmers and Settlers' Association, held at Kempsay on Saturday afternoon, Mr. C. A. Hill was elected president, and Mr. P. W. Sullivan secretary. It was decided to leave the matter of selecting a Parliamentary candidate for a specially convened meeting.

CHAMBER OF AGRICULTURE.

CONSERVING THE PRODUCERS' INTERESTS.

READY-MADE FARMS FOR SETTLERS.
A pleasant gathering took place at the A.R.C. hall on Saturday evening on the occasion of the annual meeting of the New South Wales Chamber of Agriculture. The chair was occupied by Mr. Henry Lord, the president.

According to the tenth annual report, which was read by the retiring secretary, Mr. H. J. Rumney, many matters affecting the agricultural interests of the State had received the attention of the chamber. "We fought long and hard," the report stated, "for the creation of a separate Department of Agriculture, which we succeeded in getting, but which now seems in danger of reverting to the old system of being administered by the Minister of Lands. At last, however, we have secured a Federal Bureau of Agriculture, which is again coming to the front as a means of securing the interests of the farmer."

A FRUITGROWER'S VIEW.
A fruitgrower from the Seven Hills district was also asked for his views on the new regulations. He said he had been a member of the Fruitgrowers' Association for many years, and that the new regulations were a great improvement on the old ones. He said that the new regulations were a great improvement on the old ones, and that the new regulations were a great improvement on the old ones.

before we see the fruit of our efforts." The speaker, Mr. J. W. Walker, who was acknowledged as the most successful fruitgrower in the district, was the only one of the support committee who had been elected to the office of president of the Chamber of Agriculture. The report of the Chamber of Agriculture was proposed by Mr. H. J. Rumney, who referred to the necessity for land reform and decentralization.

The president responded, and acknowledged the assistance he had received from the secretary and his co-workers on the committee. Mr. G. W. Walker had, he said, done good work in connection with the transport of wheat. Mr. Rumney remarked that, though he was retiring from the position of secretary, he intended to continue to give the council every assistance in carrying out its work. Mr. W. S. Campbell proposed a "Kindred Association" which would be a body of fruitgrowers and other agriculturalists, and would be a body of fruitgrowers and other agriculturalists, and would be a body of fruitgrowers and other agriculturalists.

Mr. W. H. O'Malley Wood responded on behalf of the Government. He said that the Government was very much interested in the operations of the Chamber of Agriculture, and that the Government was very much interested in the operations of the Chamber of Agriculture. He said that the Government was very much interested in the operations of the Chamber of Agriculture, and that the Government was very much interested in the operations of the Chamber of Agriculture.
